Contained definition: Sports educology includes knowledge related to the principles, structure, function and interaction of individual components of sports science. It is a way to solve problems:

- Socio-scientific aspects of sports sciences and the sports movement, which mainly include philosophical, historical, legal and economic aspects. Furthermore, aspects of social development and socialization of a person, organizational aspects to the issue of managing a sports movement, and epistemological and methodological aspects from the point of view of knowledge, including their connections. In addition to the mentioned aspects, we also recommend the aspects of sports in relation to the maintenance and support of health through physical activities and to the quality of life and, finally, to the environment.
- Pedagogical and psychological aspects of sports sciences, which mainly include biological and psychological knowledge of human development, motor, and physical principles of human movement, which demonstrably lead to a higher quality of life, to strengthening health and to the prevention of civilizational diseases. Furthermore, the pedagogical and psychological foundations of education and training in sports, including the theory and practice of education, training, and sports training. In addition to the above, we recommend structural, developmental, systemic, diagnostic, and didactic knowledge of physical activity in terms of its influence on the formation of a human's personality, sports performance, psychomotor principles of human physical activity.
- Subject aspects of human biological and motor development, selection of talents for sports, periodization of training load, didactics of sports and special didactics of sports theory, didactics of sports training and basics of research methodology in physical and sports education.
